

I just received this email:

“The CBA is attempting to impose the federal "established business relationship" exemption on Indiana consumers. If successful, anybody that you currently have a business relationship with (e.g., your bank, credit card company, long distance carrier) will be able to call you as often as they want.”

I am very upset to know that even though I, in good faith, signed up for the “no call list,” This is in danger of happening to me. I am attempting to have my own small business that I run from my home. I am barely able to keep up with all the phone calls I get now so it’s disturbing to me to think that a law may be passed that adds so much more of a burden.

Please reconsider this proposal because it will put an undue burden on me and other people as well. I get enough communication from these companies via email and the Postal Service!
